With 2400 people from 166 clubs competing, this is one of the largest one day rowing races in the world. It takes place over the famous Thames championship course and it represents the first opportunity for members of Oxford and Cambridge's 2008 boat race squads to put markers down for the big race itself. It's also one of the few opportunities for GB internationals to compete against each other in public. However, with twenty different events, from women's junior quadruple skulls to men's elite coxless fours being raced on the day, there should be something for everyone.
